How to use this kit

Set aside about an hour. Work through the templates in order, then read your draft out loud once before you publish. If it sounds like you talking to a client, you are done.

How the templates work. Anything in [yellow brackets] is yours to replace. Keep the parts that sound like you, change the parts that don't. The templates are a starting point, not a script.

Three things to keep in mind

1. Write to one person. Picture a real client you helped, before they came to you, and write to them.
2. Lead with them, not with you. Your training matters, but it belongs further down.
3. Keep it honest. Never use client stories, quotes or details, even disguised, and only list what you are trained and licensed to offer.

01 · THE GUIDE

How people read your profile

Someone looking for a therapist is often tired, worried and comparing a long list of faces. Most decide in well under a minute whether to keep reading. They are quietly asking four questions.

1. Do you understand what I'm going through?

- Name what they feel in their words, not clinical ones.
- "Lying awake replaying the day" lands better than "rumination".

2. Can you actually help with it?

- Say plainly what changes when you work together.
- Explain your methods in a sentence each (page 5).

3. Is this realistic for me?

- Fees, insurance, sliding scale, location, online or in person.
- Uncertainty here stops more people than price does.

4. What happens if I reach out?

- Tell them exactly what the first step looks like.
- A free call, a reply within a day, a short form.

Your opening lines do most of the work

In directory search results, people usually see your photo, your name and only the start of your statement before they decide whether to click. So the first two or three sentences should answer question 1, on their own, with no warm-up. Save "I am a licensed..." for later.

A quick test. Cover your name and photo, read only your first two sentences, and ask: would the client I most want to help think "that's me"? If not, start with the opening template on the next page.

02 · TEMPLATE

Your opening paragraph

Pick the version closest to who you see, then fill it in. Two to four sentences is plenty.

FOR ADULTS

Maybe you're [feeling / doing] and wondering [the question they ask themselves]. On the outside things look [fine / busy / together], but inside it feels like [their words for it]. You don't have to keep carrying that on your own. Together we can [the change you help with].

FOR COUPLES

If the same argument about [common topic] keeps coming back, or you feel more like [roommates / strangers] than partners, you're not failing. You're stuck in a pattern, and patterns can change. I help couples [the change, e.g. talk without it turning into a fight].

FOR PARENTS OF CHILDREN AND TEENS

When your [child / teen] is [what parents notice], it's hard to know what's normal and what needs help. I work with [age range] and their parents to [the change], so home can feel [calmer / like home again].

Do

- Use words a client would say out loud.
- Describe one specific moment, not a diagnosis list.
- End on hope and a clear direction.

Avoid

- Opening with your degrees or years in practice.
- "I provide a safe, non-judgmental space" as line one.
- Promises of a cure or a timeline.

03 · TEMPLATE

How you help, in plain words

Clients choose a person, not a method. Name your approach, then say what it actually feels like to do it.

YOUR APPROACH PARAGRAPH

In our sessions, we'll [what you do together]. I draw on [method], which means [one plain sentence], and [method], which helps with [what it helps with]. My style is [warm and direct / gentle and practical / curious], and you'll always know [why we're doing what we're doing / where we're headed].

Plain-word starters for common approaches

Adjust these to how you actually practise. Only list approaches you are trained in.

IF YOU USE	YOU COULD SAY
CBT	We look at the thoughts and habits that keep you stuck, and practise small, practical ways to shift them.
DBT	You learn concrete skills for handling big emotions, getting through hard moments and keeping relationships steady.
ACT	Instead of fighting difficult feelings, you learn to make room for them and move toward what matters to you.
EMDR	A structured way of processing painful memories so they feel less raw and stop running the present.
Psychodynamic	We explore how past experiences and patterns show up in your life now, so you can understand yourself and choose differently.
Person-centred	You lead, I listen closely, and together we make sense of what you're carrying, at your pace.
Play therapy	Children often show what they can't yet say. Play gives them a safe way to work through it.

04 · TEMPLATE

What to expect

The unknown is one of the biggest reasons people put off reaching out. Take it away.

YOUR FIRST SESSION

Our first session is a chance to [get to know each other / talk about what brought you here]. You don't need to prepare anything or have the right words. We'll talk about [what you cover], and you can ask me anything about how I work. By the end, you'll have a sense of [whether we're a good fit / what working together would look like].

PRACTICAL DETAILS

I see clients [in person in (town) / online across (state) / both]. Sessions are [length] and cost [fee]. I [am in network with (plans) / can provide a superbill for out-of-network reimbursement]. [I keep a few sliding scale spots / Evening and weekend times are available].

Keep it current. If you're not taking new clients, have a waitlist, or your fees change, update the profile the same day. Out-of-date details cost you trust before the first call.

Questions worth answering somewhere on your profile

- Do you see clients online, in person, or both?
- Which ages do you work with?
- Do you take insurance, and which?
- How soon could someone start?
- How long is a typical session?
- How do they book or get in touch?

05 · TEMPLATE

Your closing and next step

Finish by lowering the bar to reaching out. One clear action, and a little reassurance.

CLOSING PARAGRAPH

Reaching out can be the hardest part, and it's okay not to be sure. [Call / Email / Book] a free [15-minute] consultation and we'll talk about what you're looking for and whether I'm the right fit. I reply to every message within [one business day].

Next-step lines you can borrow

SITUATION	TRY
You offer a free call	Book a free 15-minute call. No pressure, just a conversation.
You prefer email first	Send me a short message about what's going on, and I'll reply within a day with next steps.
You have a waitlist	I have a short waitlist right now. Reach out and I'll let you know realistic timing, or suggest a colleague.
You see couples	Either of you can reach out. You don't both need to be sure yet.
You see teens	Parents, feel free to reach out first. We'll find a way to start that works for your teen too.

Link it to your own site. Your profile is borrowed space. Point people to your website, where you can say more, show your office and let them book directly.

06 · TIPS

Photo and headline tips

Your photo is the first thing anyone sees. It doesn't need to be professional, it needs to look like the person they'll meet.

A photo that works

- Recent, and looks like you on an ordinary day.
- Face and shoulders, eyes toward the camera.
- Soft daylight from a window in front of you.
- A warm, natural expression. A real smile beats a posed one.
- A plain or softly blurred background.

Photos that hold you back

- Cropped from a group or holiday photo.
- Sunglasses, hats or a busy background.
- Dark, grainy or taken from below.
- Five or more years old.
- A logo instead of your face.

Headline ideas

Where you can add a short line about yourself, use it to say who you help and how, in plain words.

FILL IN

Helping [who] with [what] [in (town) and online / using (approach)].

INSTEAD OF	TRY
Licensed therapist, 15 years' experience	Helping anxious professionals sleep, focus and slow down
Couples counseling	For couples who keep having the same fight
Child and adolescent therapy	Calm, practical support for teens and the parents who love them

07 · CHECKLIST

Before you hit publish

Print this page, or tick it off on screen. Ten minutes here saves months of the wrong enquiries.

- [ ] My first two sentences describe the client's experience, not my credentials.
- [ ] I've used words a client would say, and explained any clinical term.
- [ ] Each approach I list has a plain sentence explaining what it's like.
- [ ] I only list specialties and methods I'm trained and licensed to offer.
- [ ] Fees, insurance and sliding scale details are clear and current.
- [ ] It says whether I see clients online, in person, or both, and where.
- [ ] The ages and client groups I work with are clear.
- [ ] There is one clear next step, and I've said how fast I reply.
- [ ] My photo is recent, well lit and looks like me.
- [ ] There are no client stories, quotes or identifying details anywhere.
- [ ] My website link works and goes to a page that matches this profile.
- [ ] I've read the whole profile out loud once, and it sounds like me.
- [ ] I've set a reminder to review it every three months.

ONE MORE THING

Your profile gets the click. Your website gets the call.

When someone likes your profile, the next thing they do is look you up. If your website says the same things in the same voice, the decision gets easy.

wwisermind builds websites and marketing only for therapists and psychologists:

- Websites written in your voice, from one conversation
- Local SEO so you're found in your city and on Google Maps
- AI search visibility, so ChatGPT and Gemini can recommend you
